and Global Affairs (ISGA)

Content of the Programme

On the Intelligence and National Security track we explore the secretive world of intelligence agencies and the vital roles they play in informing policymaking, influencing statecraft, diplomacy and international relations, and maintaining both foreign and domestic security.

The four courses on this specialisation track examine such topics as:

- ▶ Intelligence collection and analysis;
- ▶ Covert action;
- ▶ Offensive cyber operations;
- ▶ The different responsibilities and priorities of intelligence agencies in different parts of the globe;
- ▶ The relationship between intelligence agencies and policymakers.

You will learn both academic and professional skills on this track, including: data collection, data analysis, reviewing and critically engaging with current research on numerous subjects and fields such as those listed before, international negotiation, and providing intelligence briefings to policymakers.

We welcome students with backgrounds in Security Studies, International Relations/Studies, Political Science, Cyber Security, History, Area Studies, and other related fields.
